

What about buying fireworks in Ohio or Indiana?

Anyone who's driven into Indiana from Michigan knows there are enormous fireworks stores just across the state line. That's because in years past, Indiana had looser fireworks regulations. Michiganders would make pilgrimages to the Hoosier border towns of Fremont along I-69 or Middlebury along U.S. 131 to fill their trunks with explosive contraband.

But fireworks laws in Michigan are fairly similar to those in Indiana, so there's less need to make a trip to get the good stuff.

And Ohio? You can buy fireworks in Ohio comparable to what you can get here, but you have to sign a document promising not to set them off until you leave the Buckeye State.
